Ashley Stewart, MSW, PhD

Assistant Professor, Temple University, College of Public Health, School of Social Work
Subject Matter Expert, C4 Innovations

Ashley Stewart understands and respects the intricacies inherent in matters related to diversity and inclusion. Her areas of study and research have included macro- and mezzo-level social work; policy-based recommendations to address various forms of institutional and systemic oppression; interpersonal and group dynamics; critical self-awareness for anti-oppressive practice; and web-based synchronous and asynchronous platforms in social justice and racial equity work. She has 5 years of experience teaching interdisciplinary students about social justice theories and frameworks, ethics in social justice, diversity and inclusion, power, race, oppression, and privilege. Her classes have focused on different forms of oppression, such as racism, classism, sexism, heterosexism, xenophobia, transphobia, ageism, ableism, anti-Semitism, and religious and gender-based discrimination. Ashley has served on several committees at Temple University and other colleges, sharing her expertise on diversity strategic planning. She completed a master's degree in social work at Columbia University and received a doctorate from Ohio State University.
